

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS
DALLAS DIVISION

ILIFE TECHNOLOGIES, INC.,	§
	§
Plaintiff,	§
	§
v.	§	No. 3:13-cv-04987
	§
NINTENDO OF AMERICA, INC.,	§
	§
Defendant.	§

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

Before the Court is Nintendo of America, Inc.’s Motion to Dismiss or Transfer for Improper Venue Under 28 U.S.C. § 1406(a) [ECF No. 206]. On June 23, 2017, the Court heard oral argument on the Motion. As stated on the record at the hearing, the Motion is DENIED. The Court now issues this Memorandum Opinion and Order describing its reasons for denying the Motion.

1. Background

iLife filed this patent infringement suit on December 23, 2013. Nintendo filed its Answer on April 28, 2014. In ¶ 7 of the Answer, Nintendo stated:

Defendant admits that venue is proper in this District pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 1391 and 1400(b). Defendant denies that the Northern District of Texas is a convenient venue for this dispute and reserves the right to transfer pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1404.

Answer ¶ 7.

On April 29, 2014, Nintendo filed a Motion to Transfer Venue pursuant to § 1404(a). Nintendo broadly argued that the convenience factors under § 1404(a) supported a transfer to the Western District of Washington, where Nintendo’s headquarters are located in Redmond, Washington. In the alternative, Nintendo asked for the case to be transferred to the Northern District of California. Neither the motion nor the reply mentioned § 1406. After oral argument on the § 1404 Motion, the Court denied Nintendo's Motion to Transfer. The Court noted that Nintendo's headquarters were in Redmond, Washington, but that most of Nintendo's witnesses would be travelling from Japan, and the difference in distance between Washington and Texas for foreign witnesses was not significant for venue purposes. Nintendo moved for reconsideration of the denial, which the Court denied.

On November 28, 2014, Nintendo moved to file its Amended Answer to assert an affirmative defense of inequitable conduct. The Court granted Nintendo's motion; the Amended Answer contained the same paragraph on venue as Nintendo's first Answer:

Defendant admits that venue is proper in this District pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 1391 and 1400(b). Defendant denies that the Northern District of Texas is a convenient venue for this dispute and reserves the right to transfer pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1404.

Am. Answer [ECF No. 61] ¶ 7.

On May 22, 2017, the Supreme Court decided TC Heartland LLC v. Kraft Foods Group Brands LLC, 137 S. Ct. 1514 (2017), holding that for purposes of the patent venue statute, a corporation "resides" only in its state of incorporation. Nintendo moves to dismiss or transfer this case to the Western District of Washington under § 1406(a), contending that in light of TC Heartland, venue is improper in the Northern District of Texas. Jury selection and the pretrial conference for this case is scheduled for August 14, 2017. Trial is scheduled to begin the week of August 21, 2017.

2. Legal Background

Section 1400(b), the patent venue statute, provides that:

Any civil action for patent infringement may be brought in the judicial district where the defendant resides, or where the defendant has committed acts of infringement and has a regular and established place of business.

28 U.S.C. § 1400(b); see also Act of June 25, 1948, ch. 646, 62 Stat. 869, 936.

In Fourco Glass Co. v. Transmirra Products Corp., 353 U.S. 222, 226 (1957), the Supreme Court considered the relationship between § 1400(b) and the general venue statute, § 1391. The Supreme Court had earlier considered a similar question in Stonite Products Co. v. Melvin Lloyd Co., 315 U.S. 561 (1942), specifically whether Section 48 of the Judicial Code, governing venue in patent litigation, was supplemented by Section 52, the general venue provision that predated Section 48.¹ In Stonite, the Court held that Section 52 did not alter the scope of Section 48, which was “the exclusive provision controlling venue in patent infringement proceedings,” and enacted as “a restrictive measure, limiting a prior, broader venue.” Id. at 566. “Congress did not intend the Act of 1897 to dovetail with the general provisions relating to the venue of civil suits, but rather that it alone should control venue in patent infringement proceedings.” Id. at 565.

In 1948, the current version of the patent venue statute, § 1400(b), was enacted. Act of June 25, 1948. Ch. 646, 62 Stat. 869, 936. The general venue statute was amended in the same enactment, and consisted of one sentence which read:

(c) A corporation may be sued in any judicial district in which it is incorporated or licensed to do business or is doing business, and such judicial district shall be regarded as the residence of such corporation for venue purposes.

Id. at 935.

The Supreme Court in Fourco was again called upon to consider the interplay between the patent venue statute and the general venue statute. When discussing the significance of recent changes made to § 1391 and § 1400(b), the Supreme Court held that for purposes of § 1400(b), a corporation “resides” only in its State of incorporation:

¹Section 52 was derived from R.S. § 740, which in turn stemmed from the Act of May 4, 1858, c. 27, 11 Stat. 272. Stonite, 315 U.S. at 566. Section 48 was enacted from the Act of March 3, 1897, c. 395, 29 Stat. 695. Id.

Substitution of words “where the defendant resides” for “of which the defendant is inhabitant” in patent infringement venue statute, on ground that words “inhabitant” and “resident” were synonymous as respects venue, negatived intention to make corporations suable in patent infringement cases where they are merely “doing business,” since the synonymous words mean “domicile” and in respect of corporations mean the state of incorporation only.

Id.

The Supreme Court in Fourco also discussed the interplay between § 1400(b) and § 1391, the general venue statute:

We think it is clear that § 1391(c) is a general corporation venue statute, whereas [§] 1400(b) is a special venue statute applicable, specifically, to all defendants in a particular type of actions, i.e., patent infringement actions. In these circumstances the law is settled that “However inclusive may be the general language of a statute, it ‘will not be held to apply to a matter specifically dealt with in another part of the same enactment. . . .’”

. . .

We hold that 28 U.S.C. § 1400(b) is the sole and exclusive provision controlling venue in patent infringement actions, and that it is not to be supplemented by the provisions of 28 U.S.C. § 1391(c).

Id. at 229 (emphasis added).

Since the decision in Fourco, Congress has not amended § 1400(b). In 1988, however, Congress amended § 1391(c) to read as follows:

(c) For purposes of venue under this chapter, a defendant that is a corporation shall be deemed to reside in any judicial district in which it is subject to personal jurisdiction at the time the action is commenced.

Judicial Improvements and Access to Justice Act, Pub. L. No. 100–702, tit. X, § 1013(a), 102 Stat. 4642, 4669 (1988) (emphasis added).

In VE Holding Corp. v. Johnson Gas Appliance Co., 917 F.2d 1574, 1578 (Fed. Cir. 1990), the Federal Circuit held that amendments to § 1391(c) regarding the applicability of § 1391(c)—namely, the 1988 revision that stated it applied “[f]or purposes of venue under this chapter— “redefine[d] the meaning of the term ‘resides’ in” § 1400(b). Id. In making this decision, the Federal Circuit considered the Supreme Court's decision in Fourco, and whether Congress, in enacting the 1988 amendments, intended § 1400(b) to be interpreted differently:

The Supreme Court's decision in Fourco is generally viewed as holding that § 1400(b) is the 'exclusive' venue statute in patent infringement actions. Thus it is sometimes said that, since Fourco, the only way to change the way that venue in patent infringement actions is determined is to change § 1400(b). This argument fails, however, because the Supreme Court, in Brunette, 406 U.S. 706, 92 S.Ct. 1936 [1972], refused to impose such a disablement upon the Congress' ability to enact or amend legislation. The issue in Brunette was whether § 1400(b) governed venue in a patent suit involving a foreign corporation, or whether the general venue provision applicable to aliens, 28 U.S.C. § 1391(d), governed. The Court held § 1391(d) applied, and that § 1400(b) was supplemented by the provision governing suits against aliens. Fourco and Stonite were distinguished.

The specific question in Fourco was whether the statutory language previously enacted by the Congress as § 1391(c) supported a conclusion that Congress intended to have §§ 1391(c) and 1400(b) read together. On the basis of the nonspecific language of § 1391(c) and prior history as the Court read it, the Court concluded the answer was no.

Section 1391(c) as it was in Fourco is no longer. We now have exact and classic language of incorporation: "For purposes of venue under this chapter" Congress could readily have added "except for section 1400(b)," if that exception, which we can presume was well known to the Congress, was intended to be maintained. Certainly it would not be sensible to require Congress to say, "For purposes of this chapter, and we mean everything in this chapter . . .," in order to ensure that it has covered everything in a chapter of the statutes.

The issue, then, is not whether the prior cases, including Supreme Court cases, determined that under different statutory language Congress' intent was that § 1400(b) stood alone. The issue is, what, as a matter of first impression, should we conclude the Congress now intends by this new language in the venue act.

Id. at 1579 (second emphasis added).

The Federal Circuit concluded that the plain meaning of the statute, coupled with the lack of any evidence of Congress's intent to the contrary and the Supreme Court's holding in Brunette Mach. Works, Ltd. V. Kockum Indus., Inc., 406 U.S. 706, 714 (1972),² indicated that Congress intended § 1400(b) and § 1391(c) to be read together. Thus, since the Federal Circuit decided ² In Brunette, the Supreme Court expressly distinguished Fourco and Stonite, holding that § 1400(b) was supplemented by § 1391(d), the general venue provision applicable to aliens, in patent suits involving a foreign corporation. 406 U.S. at 714.

VE Holding in 1990, “the first test for venue under § 1400(b) with respect to a defendant that is a corporation, in light of the 1988 amendment to § 1391(c), is whether the defendant was subject to personal jurisdiction in the district of suit at the time the action was commenced.” Id. at 1584.

The general venue statute, § 1391, was again amended in 2011. Section 1391 now provides:

- (a) Applicability of section.—Except as otherwise provided by law—
 - (1) this section shall govern the venue of all civil actions brought in district courts of the United States; and
 - ...
- (c) Residency.—For all venue purposes—
 - ...
 - (2) an entity with the capacity to sue and be sued in its common name under applicable law, whether or not incorporated, shall be deemed to reside, if a defendant, in any judicial district in which such defendant is subject to the court's personal jurisdiction with respect to the civil action in question and, if a plaintiff, only in the judicial district in which it maintains its principal place of business;

28 U.S.C. § 1391(a), (c)–(d) (emphasis added).

After these amendments, the Federal Circuit reaffirmed the validity of VE Holding in In re TC Heartland LLC, 821 F.3d 1338 (Fed. Cir. 2016), rev’d sub nom. TC Heartland LLC v. Kraft Foods Group Brands LLC, 137 S. Ct. 1514 (2017).

In TC Heartland LLC v. Kraft Foods Group Brands LLC, 137 S. Ct. 1514 (2017), the Supreme Court reversed the Federal Circuit’s decision in VE Holding:

In Fourco, this Court definitively and unambiguously held that the word “reside[nce]” in § 1400(b) has a particular meaning as applied to domestic corporations: It refers only to the State of incorporation. Congress has not amended § 1400(b) since Fourco, and neither party asks us to reconsider our holding in that case. Accordingly, the only question we must answer is whether Congress changed the meaning of § 1400(b) when it amended § 1391. When Congress intends to effect a change of that kind, it ordinarily provides a relatively clear indication of its intent in the text of the amended provision. The current version of § 1391 does not contain any indication that Congress intended to alter the meaning of § 1400(b) as interpreted in Fourco.

Id. at 1520 (citations omitted).

Thus, post-TC Heartland, venue is proper in the case of a corporate patent defendant, where (a) the corporation is incorporated, or (b) the defendant has committed acts of infringement and has a regular and established place of business.

3. Discussion

Nintendo argues that under TC Heartland, venue is improper in the Northern District of Texas because (a) Nintendo is incorporated in Washington, and (b) Nintendo lacks a regular and established place of business in the Northern District of Texas. The Federal Circuit has held that the test to determine whether a defendant has a “regular and established business” is “whether the corporate defendant does its business in that district through a permanent and continuous presence there,” and is not a question of whether it has a “fixed physical presence in the sense of a formal office or store.” In re Cordis Corp., 769 F.2d 733, 737 (Fed. Cir. 1985). Nintendo argues that it does not operate an office in Texas, employ anyone in Texas, or maintain any offices in Texas.³ Nintendo also contends that iLife has not alleged any facts supporting that Nintendo has a “regular and established business” in Texas, and that it is the plaintiff’s burden to do so. See Med. Designs, Inc. v. Orthopedic Tech., Inc., 684 F. Supp. 445, 446 (N.D. Tex. 1988) (“[T]he plaintiff bears the burden of proving both acts of infringement and a regular place of business in order to establish proper venue.”). Nintendo maintains that if this case were filed today, venue in the Northern District would be improper under TC Heartland. Nintendo further argues that TC Heartland has retroactive effect on pending cases.

iLife argues that Nintendo affirmatively admitted that venue was proper in its Answer and Amended Answer, and by failing to make a “timely and sufficient” objection to venue, Nintendo waived its venue defense. It did not file a Rule 12 motion in this case, and as stated above, in its Answer and Amended Answer, it “admit[ed] that venue is proper in this District pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 1391 and 1400(b).” However, Nintendo maintains that it did not waive improper venue, because before the TC Heartland decision was issued, the defense of improper venue was not available, due to the Federal Circuit precedent of VE Holding. For support, Nintendo cites to various cases recognizing that a change in controlling law—or an “intervening change in law”—can permit parties to assert previously unraised grounds.

³ For support, Nintendo cites to the declaration of Richard Medway, Nintendo’s Vice President and Deputy General Counsel, which was provided as an exhibit to Nintendo’s Earlier Motion to Transfer. ECF No. 11-2 at APP.166.

iLife makes two main arguments in response to Nintendo’s contention that TC Heartland is new intervening law that permits Nintendo to raise a venue challenge at this late stage. First, iLife argues that the decision in TC Heartland did not qualify as a change in law. Second, iLife argues the Fifth Circuit does not recognize an intervening change of law doctrine so as to overcome Nintendo’s venue waiver under Rule 12. For the reasons below, the Court concludes that TC Heartland does not qualify as an intervening change in law, and accordingly, does not reach whether the Fifth Circuit recognizes an exception to waiver in circumstances such as these.

iLife argues that “[t]he Supreme Court plainly stated that its decision in TC Heartland was not a change of law, and that its decision in Fourco interpreting § 1400(b) has been good law for the past 60 years.” In making its argument that TC Heartland did not create “new law,” iLife relies on the opinions of two Courts that have considered venue transfer post-TC Heartland: Senior Judge Harry Coke Morgan, Jr., in the Eastern District of Virginia in Cobalt Boats, LLC v. Sea Ray Boats, Inc., No. 2:15-cv-21, 2017 WL 2556679 (E.D. Va. June 7, 2017), and Magistrate Judge Payne in the Eastern District of Texas in Elbit Systems Land v. Hughes Network Systems, LLC, No. 2:15-CV-00037, 2017 WL 2651618, at *18 (E.D. Tex. June 20, 2017). In Cobalt Boats, the defendant moved to transfer under TC Heartland and asserts virtually the same arguments Nintendo does here, namely that TC Heartland qualified as intervening new law permitting it to reassert an otherwise waived venue challenge. Judge Henry Morgan disagreed, and held instead that TC Heartland did not create new law:

Based on the Supreme Court's holding in TC Heartland, Fourco has continued to be binding law since it was decided in 1957, and thus, it has been available to every defendant since 1957. Accordingly, the Court FINDS that TC Heartland does not qualify for the intervening law exception to waiver because it merely affirms the viability of Fourco. Defendant Brunswick's assumption that Fourco was no longer good law was reasonable but wrong, and it cannot be excused from its waiver by saying there was a change in the law.

Cobalt Boats, 2017 WL 2556679, at *3.

Similarly, in Elbit Systems, Magistrate Judge Payne held that TC Heartland did not qualify as an intervening change in law, noting that “[w]hile the Federal Circuit’s decision in VE Holding was inconsistent with Fourco, the Federal Circuit cannot overturn Supreme Court precedent.” 2017 WL 2651618, at *20.

During oral argument on the Motion to Transfer, Nintendo’s counsel argued that in VE Holding, the Federal Circuit did not overrule the Supreme Court’s Fourco decision, but instead held that Congress had amended the general venue statute in such a way that abrogated the effect of Fourco. Nintendo argues that VE Holding addressed a different question than Fourco and Stonite—namely, whether Congress intended the 1988 amendments to § 1391(c) to supplement § 1400(b)—and thus, until the Supreme Court in TC Heartland reaffirmed the validity of Fourco, the Federal Circuit’s decision in VE Holding was the definitive authority on the relationship between § 1400(b) and § 1391(c), as amended in 1988 and 2011. See In re TC Heartland, 821 F.3d at 1342 (“In VE Holding, we found that the Supreme Court’s decision in Fourco with regard to the appropriate definition of corporate residence for patent cases in the absence of an applicable statute to be no longer the law because in the 1988 amendments Congress had made the definition of corporate residence applicable to patent cases.”). Nintendo’s argument thus appears to be that following the decision in VE Holding in 1990 up until the Supreme Court decided TC Heartland in May of 2017, the highest authority available had deemed Fourco overridden by congressional action, and accordingly the Supreme Court’s reaffirming of Fourco constituted a change of law.

“In the domain of statutory interpretation, Congress is the master,” and “obviously has the power to correct [the Supreme Court’s] mistakes.” W. Va. Uni. Hosp., Inc. v. Casey, 499 U.S. 83, 113 (1991) (Stevens, J., dissenting), superseded by statute, Civil Rights Act of 1991, Pub. L. No. 102-166 § 113, 105 Stat. 1072, as recognized in Landgraf v. USI Film Prods., 511 U.S. 244, 251 (1994). However, absent clear legislative history, identifying when Congress acts to undo Supreme Court action is far from simple.⁴ Similarly, the effect of congressional action in abrogating Supreme Court precedent is unclear, especially when the intent of Congress is not divulged.

It is clear that the Supreme Court has the final authority on statutory interpretation and the continuing validity of its decisions. In the context of overrides, the Supreme Court has expressly acknowledged when it deems congressional enactments to have overridden an earlier decision. See, e.g., Exxon Mobil Corp. v. Allapattah Servs., Inc., 545 U.S. 546, 557 (2005) (“In Finley we emphasized that ‘[w]hatever we say regarding the scope of jurisdiction conferred by a particular statute can of course be changed by Congress.’ In 1990, Congress accepted the invitation. It passed the Judicial Improvements Act, which enacted § 1367, the provision which controls these cases.” (citations omitted)); Landgraf, 511 U.S. at 251 (“Other sections of the [Civil Rights Act of 1991] were obviously drafted with ‘recent decisions of the Supreme Court’ in mind.”). What is unclear, however, is the extent to which a lower court, such as the Federal Circuit, has the authority to deem a Supreme Court decision overridden by an act of Congress. It is particularly unclear when the congressional act in question, such as the one reviewed by the Federal Circuit in VE Holding, contains no reference to the Supreme Court decision allegedly being overridden, or even the statute at issue. See VE Holding, 917 F.2d at 1580–81 (“While the legislative history reveals that a purpose of the amendment is to define venue of corporate defendants and to prescribe the venue determination in multidistrict states, it does not speak to how or whether this amendment is intended to affect § 1400(b), or for that matter other sections of chapter 87.”).

⁴ Numerous academics have devoted substantial efforts to identifying congressional overrides, with varying methodologies and criteria for what qualifies as an override. See, e.g., Matthew R. Christiansen & William N. Eskridge, Jr., Congressional Overrides of Supreme Court Statutory Interpretation Decisions, 1967–2011, 92 Tex. L. Rev. 1317, 1325 (2014); William N. Eskridge, Jr., Overriding Supreme Court Statutory Interpretation Decisions, 101 Yale L.J. 331, 332 n.1 (1991) (“This Article will use the term “override” to mean any time Congress reacts consciously to, and modifies a statutory interpretation decision. . . . With only a few exceptions, this Article will not use the term “override” to include statutes for which the legislative history—mainly committee reports and hearings—does not reveal a legislative focus on judicial decisions.”); see also James Buatti & Richard L. Hasen, Conscious Congressional Overriding of the Supreme Court, Gridlock, and Partisan Politics, 93 Tex. L. Rev. See Also 263, 264 (2015) (discussing the significance of considering both conscious and inadvertent congressional overrides).

The Court concludes, therefore, except where congressional abrogation of a Supreme Court decision is express, “only [the Supreme] Court may overrule one of its precedents”—whether through its own opinion or recognition of congressional override—and until that occurs, Fourco is and still was the law. See Thurston Motor Lines, Inc. v. Jordan K. Rand, Ltd., 460 U.S. 533, 533 (1983) (per curiam). In VE Holding, the Federal Circuit clearly thought that Congress had implicitly overridden Fourco by statutory amendment. However, until the Supreme Court considered the question, Fourco remained the law. The intervening twenty-seven years may have created reliance on VE Holding by litigants, including Nintendo, but that “does not change the harsh reality” that a party could have “ultimately succeeded in convincing the Supreme Court to reaffirm Fourco, just as the petitioner in TC Heartland did.” Elbit Systems, 2017 WL 2651618, at *20.

For the foregoing reasons, the Court concludes that TC Heartland does not qualify as an intervening change in law. Accordingly, the Court does not reach the issue of whether Nintendo may raise a previously waived challenge to improper venue on the basis of TC Heartland.

Nintendo's Motion to Transfer is DENIED.

SO ORDERED.

June 27, 2017.

BARBARA M. G. LYNN
CHIEF JUDGE